Free: PDF (A4).This invention relates generally to sensor valves and is particularly concerned with a sensor valve for use in an aircraft wing to control the control surface end use of bleed air for engine restarting. In most aircraft, bleed air from the main engine compressor is used to control surface/lap motion during landing and approach. The function is to control what would otherwise be excessive airspeed for the aircraft. The reason behind this function is that during landing and approach, the wing of the aircraft is at its most streamlined or least resistance-inducing configuration. Reducing the vehicle edd6d56e20
